I'm developing a system that uses asynchronous messaging over the datastore. When a worker receives a message, it sends out a call-id to the sender. I can easily get the sender's username when receiving a message in the callback. What I'm trying to find out is what's the best way to get the caller's call-id when that callback is invoked. With this in mind, I went through the docs and came across this: I'm unsure of how the two could interact, or whether, or not, that would be a viable way to retrieve the call-id for the currently executing call. A: No, there is no way to do this. The documentation is for an entirely different scenario, where you get a callback from a background process and can perform operations on the current request from that. 0\fr. ." ."
