I have an application using ElasticSearch that, periodically, needs to have a search performed on a search index. The search can take anywhere from 0 to 3-5 minutes to complete. My question is: The most efficient way of displaying a progress bar whilst that search is running? A: I have implemented the following solution: The way to implement a progress bar is to create a search-status-page which listens to the progress of the search. The search-status-page keeps track of the number of rows found, and display the progress bar accordingly. With each search result, the search-status-page will emit an event. This event will be listened to in the loading-page. In this loading-page, only the row-total is shown, and a progress bar is displayed until the search-status-page takes a response from the ElasticSearch server. This allows me to display a nice progress bar in my web-browser whilst the search takes place. Allergic contact dermatitis caused by cosmetic preservatives. Cosmetic preservatives induce contact eczema in a significant number of patients. The main emollients and preservatives, some of their mechanisms of action and their allergenic potential are reviewed. Major cosmetic preservatives are phenols, naphthols and cresols, formaldehyde, parabens, triclosan and sulfonamides. Perf

When I click on OK, the following error appears: Resulting object is not a record. Original error: [Err] 00000 - "Resulting object is not a record." *Cause: An object was retrieved through a "class" accessor method, and .Net did not find a set accessor for a specific property (RecordCoeff with Value). This usually happens when: A column with a "create by" constraint was not found. *Action: Make sure the FK field in the database definition is spelled correctly,. *Result: 0 A: Still no solution but I tried a new approach. I think the problem lies in the code of the report action on the report. I made a report by using subreport instead of query (of course in the same database). It works fine and I got the output I was looking for. I hope to have one day a chance to make it fully functional. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION APR 11 2010 MOLLY C.
