The impact of inter-temporal substitution in health and health care. Over the past fifty years, income redistribution has become one of the central features of modern welfare states and economic development. The major objective of welfare state redistribution is to ensure that none of the recipients are deprived of health care. Inter-temporal substitution is the most favoured policy to achieve this objective. Empirical evidence on the link between income redistribution and income inequality was limited and inconclusive. In this paper, we explore the causal effects of income redistribution with an emphasis on health care spending on inter-temporal substitution using a sample of 70 OECD countries over the years 1960-2014. We estimate the effects of income redistribution on health spending using an interrupted time-series and a difference-in-difference specification. The results indicate that welfare states are less likely to offer health care to the poorest families. Income redistribution lowers poverty and lowers household-level income inequality.Q: Does the sum of the first k factorials always equal the sum of n factorials? This may be a duplicate, I'm not entirely sure what I'm looking for. I want to know if for some positive integer n: $$\sum_{k=1}^n k! = n!\tag{1}$$ The trivial cases for $n=1,2,3,4,5,6$ all hold true, and so it's a reasonably reasonable conjecture. I have no idea what induction would even be applied here. Help? EDIT: I believe the question is somewhat ambiguous, sorry. I'm specifically asking whether it is true that $$\sum_{k=1}^n k! = n!$$ for all n (that is, n factorial $\in \mathbb N$) A: It's true for $n=1, 2, 3$ but not for $n=4$. For $n=4$ and for $n=5$ the relation holds when the values for $n\geq k$ are removed. For $n=6$ it is true for $k\leq 6$ and $k=7$ but not for $k=8$. You can use induction. The relation holds for $n\leq k$. When adding the values for $n\leq k$ to the relation, you get the following

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a device for supplying vaporized substances to a processing vessel of a vacuum processing system for performing vacuum processing such as film formation on a substrate, or cleaning of the substrate, and a method for controlling the same. 2. Description of the Related Art The vacuum processing system for performing vacuum processing such as film formation on a substrate or cleaning of the substrate, and a device used for the processing have been developed, and the system for performing various kinds of processes has been put into practical use. Here, as the device, an EUV photomask blank manufacturing device is given as an example. This EUV photomask blank manufacturing device is a device for transferring a photomask pattern onto a photomask blank having a quartz substrate using EUV light. In the device, when the film formation process is performed on a substrate, a processing vessel for storing a semiconductor substrate and the like is used. For example, such a processing vessel having a box shape is used. A reaction gas supply path for supplying a film forming gas into the processing vessel, a purge gas supply path for supplying a purge gas, and the like are also used. The reaction gas is supplied from the reaction gas supply path, and the purge gas is supplied from the purge gas supply path. The reaction gas supplied to the processing vessel is decomposed to produce a film on the substrate. For example, as disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,588,005, in the above EUV photomask blank manufacturing device, a cleaning gas supply portion and a purge gas supply portion are provided to each of the processing vessels. In addition, the reaction gas supply path and the purge gas supply path are provided to the processing vessel. The reaction gas is supplied into the processing vessel from the reaction gas supply path, and the purge gas is supplied into the processing vessel from the purge gas supply path. In the purging process, the purge gas is supplied into the processing vessel from the purge gas supply path to remove the film forming gas remaining in the processing vessel. After the purging process, the reaction gas is supplied to the processing vessel from the reaction gas supply path to perform a film formation process. In the conventional device, the supply of the reaction gas and the supply of the purge gas are controlled by a central control unit (abbreviated to "CCU" hereinafter). According to a temperature detected by a temperature sensor provided in the reaction
