"So if NOLA dies, she'll be tragically birthing twins. As the oldest, I'm taking charge." "I CAN'T BELIEVE IT." "I hope he tells her!" - NOLA, Taft, Me, and my Dad New Orleans held her breath. I felt so trepidatious in that town, because she was a feisty and loud, strong but shy kid. I'd met her during our vacation to NOLA with my dad, and with him she seemed excited to be living a charmed life in a New Orleans where she'd grown up but had to move away and take custody of her extended family. - NOLA The front page of the New Orleans Times-Picayune screamed NOLA: LANDMARKS AND GONE. That news broke over when Dad and her watched Jurassic Park. - Dad "It could be worse. My parents are together, they've always been together. It always has been that way." But, oh girl, the weepiness. The humiliation. -NOLA - Dad and NOLA "It's okay, go grab some of those cookies and cake we made." We were the two kids, you know, we'd never been out of my house and we figured, let's go out. -"Katrina and The Saints" I mean, we were losing stuff all over the place! Miss Scottie was lost. I'd spent a day searching for her. I was too worried with the rolling TV forecasts and the endless unleashing of water. I had a pseudo delusion of her in a cardboard box in an abandoned house, that will never happen. So that never happened. -Me and NOLA She must have had a partner in crime. One of the things that makes me love her so much is that she doesn't think we're wicked. Sometimes we
