The 21-year-old righty is a first-round pick from High Point (N.C.) State in 2009 and appeared to be on the fast track to the majors. But after throwing in two spring training starts — one of which was the longest outing of his career — and totaling just seven total innings, the Braves shut down Searage. The Braves had no official explanation for the move, which Searage told MLB.com simply came down to the health of the young pitcher. "I was really excited to get my start on opening day," Searage told MLB.com. "But my elbow is feeling pretty good at this point." Searage pitched five innings in a non-simulated game on April 5th in San Diego, allowing two runs. It's been quite a transformation for the 2015 No. 3 overall pick, who once was viewed as one of the top
