.Q: how to switch one parameter to another for another function? I want to access a third function (invalid) from this one (base), but I have an error "cannot convert from 'string' to 'System.Collections.Generic.List' any idea how to fix that? function base() { System.Windows.Forms.MessageBox.Show("base"); list.Add(v); } function invalid(id) {
System.Windows.Forms.MessageBox.Show("invalid" + id); } A: You can't. If you want to use a list as a parameter, you need a typed list.

If you want to have a function which takes a string, and gets the id out of it, then your function needs to take parameters of string type. The built in list type is not a typed list. If you want to make it into one, you can create your own typed list class. EDIT: I should point out that if you want to combine a few functions into a single method, you should extract them into separate methods. I.e.
