gurpreet kaur singh, one of the best and highest paid women tennis players in the world, created her own brand of tennis apparel, called "bravo". although highly successful, it was only later that india's start-up culture was applied to the development of a national brand. samtel ltd (later acquired by reliance communications) and the bmr, an advertising agency, came to contract the bravo brand. but, the economy was slow and the brand suffered. however, later a private company purchased the entire brand for a sum of rs 600 million. at that time, the entire brand was only worth rs 14.5 million - the producers' share. so, it took time for the bravo brand to establish itself in the market. today, bravos are sold in over 130 countries around the world.
