A: you can use VLC player for that Q: How to design Game Logic in Mobile Application What the best practice to implement game logic into a mobile application? Some mobile game apps have multiple screens and lots of UI components - for example leaderboards, shop, friends, facebook integration, audio, etc... All these components need to be rendered and handled on the UI thread, so the game logic doesn't really belong to the main (UI) thread. On one side, I can see that the game logic should be separate from the UI, but on the other hand I can see big parts of the game code in the UI. Because of that the UI thread can never free up for other things. How do you handle this? A: I think this is perfectly reasonable, so long as the code is well organized and does not slow the UI. Some design guidelines: Separate all logic from view in separate classes. Keep your view in touch with the state of the game. Use a state machine to transition between states, e.g. "player has died" -> "you lose". Assign small but valuable lifespans to each of the states that you create. Use Command Objects to dispatch actions. Also remember to consider the impact of cross threading. Many of these cross the thread boundary, so should be done via the performOnUiThread method of GCD. New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio on Thursday talked to reporters at a press conference about the missing girls in New Jersey — and also about himself. He spoke about a recent interview with The New York Post's Jerry Capeci, who asked the mayor what he thought of Brooklyn big man DeAndre Jordan's recent comments on Blackballing Jews. De Blasio said, "DeAndre Jordan's comments are unacceptable
