Each year, the competition is tight for the right to be the Photoshop of the year, and this year in 2018 it is Tidal's "Studio," a creative tool that includes a host of painting, motion tracking, design, and photo editing tools. All products are tagged with a Creative Cloud logo, and the app is optimized to use Apple Pencil, and other styluses like the Mighty Mouse. Like Illustrator and Photoshop, the brushes are built from Adobe's own originals. Adobe says it made this update to Photoshop to address specific workflow needs, including improved precision, performance, and stability. Aside from the collaborative features, it brings the Photoshop smart object support and Adobe's Color Sampler tools to the iPad, as well as improved export options, enhanced professional creative fixes, and more. Again, this camera has seen great success for photographers who need it to navigate difficult shoots with ease. With a 52MP image sensor, it's the largest image sensor ever in a point-and-shoot camera and the first point-and-shoot that isn't a camera phone (it shares DNA with Fujifilm's P20 and P30). The camera's image quality and feature set has made it one of the best cameras we've tested recently. Sharing is the name of the game in Imagemworks Movie Maker. With this update, the app gains a new Content Browser, significantly updated UI to make it easier to navigate, and a slightly improved user interface. The "Movie Mode" now offers new transitions, image-stabilization options, and new highlight-mask tools to help filmmakers craft better looking videos.
